LLOYD
LIBRARY & MUSEUM

We at the Lloyd are excited to announce our first speaker--and first virtual program--in the Pick Your Poison summer schedule! We'll have more to come, including in-person, virtual, and even a walking tour. Plus, our Pick Your Poison exhibition is now open, showcasing centuries of materials that express the harmful and healing properties of plants.

Finding Selective Poisons in Plants to Target Breast Cancer

When: Wednesday, June 19, 7-8 p.m.
Where: Virtual Program

Join leading cancer researcher Susan Mooberry as she discusses the quest for discovering new treatments for breast cancer. Many drugs used for the treatment of cancer are derived from or modeled after compounds found in nature, with this program taking a special focus on therapies for the treatment of challenging cancers, including triple negative breast cancers. Registration required.

The Reach of Lloyd Collaborations

While Fellows at the Lloyd in 2018, artists Anna Kell and Jonathan Frey created a series of posters (two examples pictured) addressing "plant blindness," or the tendency to see plants as simply part of the background. Recently, the topic and posters became part of a presentation and article at a palaeobotanical, or fossilized plants, conference in Prague. We couldn't resist sharing this story of the long reach of our collaborations "in the wild."

Learning at the Lloyd

People use the Lloyd in a variety of ways, from virtual programming to in-person visits. Member Natalie Perme studies for her Step 1 Medical Boards at the Lloyd, surrounded by centuries of knowledge in health science fields and working at the desk of famed chemist and discoverer of Benadryl George Rieveschl. Congratulations to Natalie for passing her board exams!

Help Us Secure $25,000

An anonymous donor has provided us with a matching gift challenge of $25,000 to secure by June 30. Help us unlock this challenge by making a gift today. This will enable us to expand our programs, preserve our invaluable collections, and ensure that knowledge remains a beacon of hope and inspiration for generations to come. Click here to make a one-time donation.

The Lloyd will be closed on June 13 to host the American Conifer Society
